By the kindness of the Surgeon and Master, and by administering proper nourishment to him, he began, in a great measure, to recover his strength and spirits, and got quite well before we reached Rio-de-Janeira.

He was, ever after, trully grateful for the attention that was shewn to him.

As soon as he was able, he did his duty as a common sailor on board the Anna till she arrived at Port Jackson: in which capacity, he was considered equal to most of the men on board.

He accompanied me to Parramatta (after leaving the ship) and resides with me there till the November following, during which time, he applied himself to Agriculture.

In Oct^r 1810, The 'Frederick' whaler arrived from England, and was bound to fish on the coast of Newzealand. - Duotini having been long absent from his friends, and wishing to return home, requested me to procure a passage for him, in the Frederick. - One of Tippiakae's sons was, at the time, living with me as were also two other Newzealanders, all of whom united in the same request. - I applied to the Master of the Frederick for their passage, who agreed to take them, on condition, that they should assist him to procure his cargo of oil, while the vessel remained on the Newzealand Coast, and when he finally left it, he would land them at the Bay of Islands. -

They were four very fine young men
